While Rabbit is undoubtedly making a strong play for the protein du jour, there's no meat as intrinsically associated with spring (especially during Easter) as lamb. And nowadays, it's appearing on menus in a number of intriguing guises, so there's no need to settle for the expected pair of chops or mint jelly-smeared loin. Which is why we've rounded up New York's Best New Lamb Dishes — from the hearty Lamb Pie at The Heath in Chelsea and the tender Albondigas (meatballs) at La Vara in Brooklyn to the Moroccan-inspired Tagine at M. Wells Steakhouse in Queens!

After undergoing a multi-million dollar renovation, this 70-year-old Theater District classic is back and better than ever. A humidity-controlled meat locker ensures that cuts of USDA prime beef are aged to perfection, but there's more to Gallagher's than Ribeye, Strip Steak and Porterhouse. The hulking, hickory-grilled Colorado Lamb Chops are well worth a try, ideally enjoyed with Lyonnaise Potatoes and Creamed Spinach alongside.
